ALCO RSC-2 HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1946-early 70s

Variations: Six-axle version of RS-2 roadswitcher; some later rebuilt with 4-wheel trucks.

Primary Assignment: Branchline service.

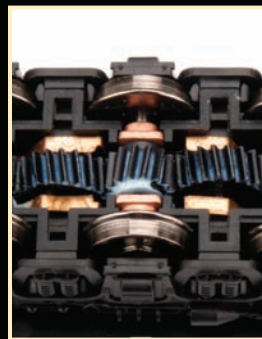

As railroads began switching from steam to diesel power, many found the new engines were a bit too heavy for the lighter rail and bridges found on branchlines. To meet these operating conditions, ALCO offered buyers a six-axle version of its popular RS-2 roadswitcher, cataloged as the RSC-2, which spread the weight over more wheels.

Equally at home working freight and passenger runs, many were purchased for a specific branch where they spent most of their working lives.

"This Train will save an Industry" declared a New York Central advertisement in 1956. With passenger traffic declining in the mid-1950s due to the rapid expansion of the Interstate Highway system, railroads were looking for ways to attract more ridership. Many, including the Pennsy, NYC, UP and others hoped the AeroTrain would do just that. Featuring a wraparound windshield, multiple headlights, a low center of gravity and new air suspension, EMD's stylish AeroTrain debuted in 1955 at the GM Powerama. Modelers can easily recreate the original 10-car consist by combining our four-car introductory set with two add-on three-car sets.

USRA 0-8-0 STEAM LOCOMOTIVE

HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1918-1950s

Variants: Numerous changes made to tenders and appliances after end of USRA control in 1920; copies built through early 1950s.

Primary Assignments: Yard switching and transfer service, also used as industrial switchers.

By 1917, the arrival of larger and much heavier freight cars had pushed most 0-6-0 designs to their limits. Realizing that railroads needed more powerful switchers, the United States Railway Administration developed plans for an all-new 0-8-0. Up-to-date in all respects, these big switchers were the equals in power of many road freight locomotives from just a few years earlier. The USRA 0-8-0 was well liked by railroads that received it and 175 were completed before government control ended in 1920. More success came in later years, as 35 different roads eventually copied the design. In fact, the last new steam locos built in the U.S. were a series of 0-8-0s, constructed by the N&W in 1951-53 that followed the general outline of the decades-old USRA design.

Special Value

Awesome Automotive Deal!

Perfect for collectors and HO Scale layouts, these high-performance cars fit snugly into the handy collector case. Each layout-ready vehicle features a detailed plastic body with finished interior and window glazing. An exquisite paint job, flashy chrome, realistic tires and appropriate graphics are the finishing touch. Each car comes in a clear plastic display box that snaps into the collector case for secure storage. The case holds 12 vehicles and features a clear plastic top and a convenient carrying handle. It opens to reveal three hinged, tiered shelves that show off your collection in style.

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1918-1950s

Variants: Numerous changes made to tenders and appliances after end of USRA control in 1920; copies built through early 1950s.

Primary Assignments: Yard switching and transfer service, also used as industrial switchers.

By 1917, the arrival of larger and much heavier freight cars had pushed most 0-6-0 designs to their limits. Realizing that railroads needed more powerful switchers, the United States Railway Administration developed plans for an all-new 0-8-0. Up-to-date in all respects, these big switchers were the equals in power of many road freight locomotives from just a few years earlier. The USRA 0-8-0 was well liked by railroads that received it and 175 were completed before government control ended in 1920. More success came in later years, as 35 different roads eventually copied the design. The last new steam locos built in the U.S. were constructed by the N&W in 1951-53 that followed the general outline of the decades-old USRA design.

New Supplier Ring Engineering

Looking for an easy-to-install HO Scale end-of-train (EOT) device? Ring offers innovative end-of-train flashers that require no modifications to the car or underframe. Each features a truck-mounted circuit board (roller-bearing truck included) that draws power from the track. A decorated, scale-sized flasher unit mounts on the supplied knuckle coupler. The EOTs are completely compatible with DC and DCC systems, and on a DCC layout will keep flashing when the train is stopped just like the real thing.

EMD SD7 DIESEL LOCOMOTIVE

HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1952 – early 80s; First unit (EMD Demonstrator #990, sold to SP in 1953, #5308; later #1518) preserved.

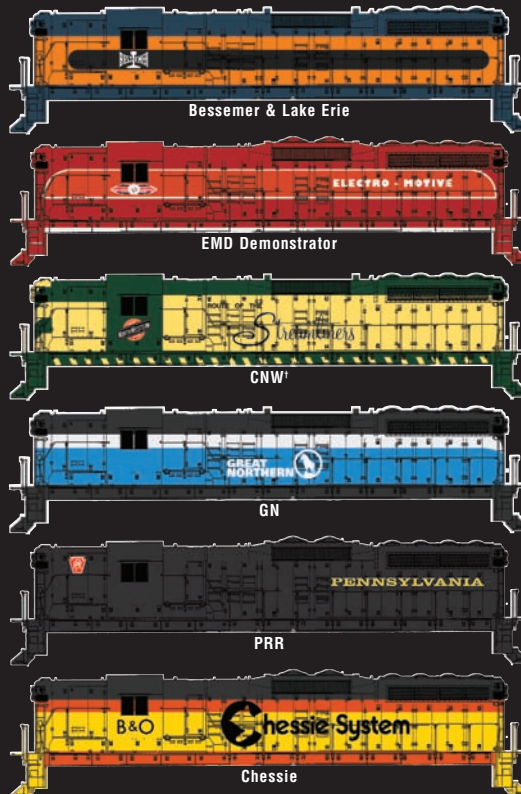

Variations: Built with and without dynamic brakes; railroad-specific appliances.

Primary Assignment: Local and branchline freight.

Originally intended for use on branch lines, EMD launched its Special Duty series in 1952 with the SD7. This loco also introduced the three-axle Flexi-Coil truck with its powered center axle. This was a major departure from earlier three-axle designs where an unpowered center axle was used to spread the engine's weight over more wheels, reducing the strain on the lighter rail and lower capacity bridges found on branches. EMD's design not only spread the weight but the extra traction motors provided more power to get trains started. The SD's longer trucks required a longer frame, and buyers could also specify a heavier frame for engines working transfers and other low speed service. Somewhat underpowered with only 1500 horsepower (same as a four-axle GP7), only 188 SD7s were built from February of 1952 through November of 1953; the more powerful SD9 was introduced the following January.
