Lights... Trains... Action...

Darkness doesn't stop trains from running or people from work or play. Many trains like PRR's Broadway Limited ran much of their route at night so lighting is essential for realistic modeling. It's easy to add and with the wide variety available here and at walthers.com/lightup, you can operate your railroad 24/7.

PROTO 2000® EMD SW8 DIESEL HO SCALE

New Roadnames & Numbers

April 2011 Delivery

PROTO FASTFACTS™

Primary Assignments: Yard and industrial switcher.

Introduced by EMD in 1950, the SW8 offered railroads and industry a rugged and reliable unit for switching chores, replacing the last of steam or earlier diesel switchers still in service. Powered by the famed 567B, the engines delivered 800 horsepower. Production ended in late 1965 with a combined total of 743 engines. Well into the 1980s, these early switchers served railroads large and small and some remain in industrial service today.

HO Gold Line Mark III Flexi-Van Flatcars

In 1957 New York Central tested the Flexi-Van system, featuring low-profile skeleton cars and special trailers with removable wheels (bogies). The lightweight design was well suited for fast freight runs and many were later modified for passenger trains with steam and signal lines. Spotting features of Mark III cars included trucks at the very ends and a short platform. Although successful, the Flexi-Van system was eclipsed in the late 70s by 89' flatcars built to handle trailers and/or containers.

Walthers Mark III Flexi-Van Flatcars come with two authentically decorated trailers in rail transport position. Metal wheels, a heavy die cast center sill and Proto MAX™ couplers ensure they run as great as they look. It's easy to mix and match trailers for a realistic train (see page 28 or walthers.com).

Did You Know?

Many figures can be backdated to fit your modeling era.

Period photos will show fashionable styles for men, women and children in most eras.

Ladies and girls skirt lengths changed frequently, and putty and styrene can be used to make these conversions.

Menswear tends to remain fairly constant, with minor changes in hats and colors.

Did You Know?

Dented and dinged, or old and rusted, cars and trucks can take quite a beating and still keep rolling.

Older models can be made to look worse for wear with a little paint. Lightly dry brushing thin paint or weathering chalks over the "steel" fenders, as well as along the bottom of door panels and trunk decks can simulate rust stains.

You can also use paint to model repairs in progress. A door or fender "finished" in gray or brown primer will be a neat detail. You can also add a small patch of bright silver to simulate new metal, or reddish-pink to match resin body fillers. Or, try painting the door or fender in a completely different color to model repair parts obtained from a salvage yard.

Did You Know?

In 1941, the US Navy worked with the George A. Fuller Construction Company of Quonset Point, Rhode Island, to design a pre-fab structure "kit." Used by every branch of the Allied forces, over 150,000 "Quonset huts" were built worldwide.

Following the end of hostilities, surplus huts sold for roughly $1000, and new owners converted them to everything imaginable. Although their heyday passed quickly, many survive to this day.
